Changing Times for Police Marksmen

The skills needed by police designated marksman have changed. Law enforcement is facing a different set of challenges than it did ten years ago, but most organizations are still looking backwards. In a world that now includes situations like the Beslan school hostage crisis, law enforcement needs to meet current and future challenges.

The precision marksman may now be called on to engage multiple targets many hundreds of yards away. A takeover at a shopping mall may require shots that, in the past, would have been considered "military distances". One hundred yard accuracy is no longer enough. Ask yourself if you know what adjustment you need for a full value 15 mph wind and your dope/comeups/holdover for a 450 yard shot.

To meet the needs of the modern police marksman, Tiger Valley is offering a 5-day Level 2 Precision Rifle Class at a special price of $199. Click here for more details.

Equipment Spotlight: Shooter Ready

A major private security and contracting firm recently finished precision rifle training at Tiger Valley and brought along Shooter Ready, a computer-based long range shooting simulation. Users learn and practice mil-dot ranging and correcting for wind under a range of shooting conditions and utilizing a variety of firearms.

Tiger Valley instructors have put the software through its paces and came away impressed. It's not a game and regardless if you're new to the long-range shooting world or not, there's lots to learn from Shooter Ready. Check it out and try the online demo at www.shooterready.com.
